

Chris ANERA

Chris is an electro dance music producer, composer, and singer from France. He started to sing around the age of 12 and began to try electro house music 3 years later. At 15, he has participated in many singing contests such as "Graines de Stars Tour" in France to try to start a singer career. But at the age of 16, pushed by the "Boys band" wave and Dance music bands, he was interested in Djing and mixing voices with electronic music.

In the 2000s, and inspired by artists like David Guetta and his track "Just a little more love", he began more seriously to try to electro house music. This is also in high school that he composed the title "Cross the oceans", where he sang himself in the original version; but after some updates, it became in 2015 a featuring with Swedish singer 'Chloe', available on his first EP release "I Need It EP".

In 2007, and for some reasons, Chris changed his way to try cinema, make some short films and work on some TV shows like 'Iron Man' and 'The Garfield Show'.

But at the end of 2014, and after meeting very good people, he decided to return to his first loves: The Electronic Dance Music. Inspired by great artists like Avicii, Calvin Harris, David Guetta.... he worked several months to finally release his first EP "I Need it", available on all legal download platforms, including the title track 'I Need It' featuring Addie Nicole from the US pop/rock band 'Halocene'.

Housepital Records, one of the coolest Dance & House music labels, part of the Housepital Group, recently signed Chris in september 2015!
Some new tracks are coming ;) ...
